Work of the Escambia Search and Rescue Unit today was "heartily endorsed" by Rear Adm. Magruder H. Tuttle, chief of Naval Air Basic Training.

Tuttle called the work of the unit "invaluable to this area."

"The Escambia Search and Rescue Unit," Tuttle said, "is a community effort that has resulted in giving the area a vital, lifesaving organization."

The U. S. Navy and Escambia Search and Rescue Unit," said

Tuttle, "are integrated to provide a combined effort to render assistance. This close cooperation can only result in providing Pensacola and the surrounding area with an indispensable community service."
